

EXTRA CRISPY STAFF · February 10, 2017

FOOD

HOLIDAYS

INTERVIEWS

This year, Valentine's Day falls on a workday. Bummer, we know—but that shouldn't deter you and your boo from bonding over a romantic breakfast. If you don't have any ideas for Valentine's Day breakfast yet, don't panic. Take cues from a few chef couples who thrive on celebrating their love for each other—and food. You know what they say, the way to your S.O.'s heart is through her or his stomach. These power couples, who work side-by-side at some of the nation's best restaurants, know that sentiment all too well and have created the cutest Valentine's Day traditions that just might spark some inspiration.

Executive Chef Justin Walker and Beverage Director and General Manager Danielle Walker, Earth at Hidden Pond in Kennebunkport, Maine

"Bringing coffee in bed first is a must. I get up super early to make sure I brew a strong pot and get a head start prepping the batter for buttermilk pancakes. We use our fresh chicken and duck eggs and local buttermilk, and fry up the pancakes in a black steel pan. Pancakes are great for a leisurely and romantic breakfast because you can cook one at a time and make it an easy and low-stress activity. We put the best real maple syrup on the table with berries, and end up making pancakes and chatting for hours." —Justin Walker